The Mechanistic Conception of Life

Biological Essays by

Jacques Loeb

Head of the Department of Experimental Biology Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research

THE achievements of Professor Jacques Loeb in the field of experimental biology have made him so widely known as to insure any book of his a large and interested circle of readers.

In his latest work, The Mechanistic Conception of Life, Professor Loeb presents many of the current problems in biology on which he has been engaged in recent years. These may be characterized in a general way as an attempt to analyze life from a purely physicochemical standpoint.

ANIMAL MICROLOGY

PRACTICAL EXERCISES IN MICROSCOPICAL METHODS

By
MICHAEL F. GUYER
Professor of Zoölogy in the University of Cincinnati

An indispensable book for teacher, physician, student, or novice who wishes to learn how to prepare his own material for microscopical examination. There are special chapters on the preparation and examination of embryological material, blood, bacteria, and objects of general interest, and on the collection and preparation of material for the microscopical work in a course in elementary zoölogy. In an appendix nearly three hundred tissues and organs with directions for properly preparing them for microscopical study are tabulated. Sufficient account of the theoretical side of microscopy is given to enable the student to get satisfactory results from his microscope.

with a due regard to its optical efficiency, practicability, convenience and durability. In leading colleges and schools the popular choice of educators is

Bausch and Lomb Microscopes

Our Model F is particularly favored by reason of its all-round adaptability.

The long curved handle arm with a large stage provides unusual space for the manipulation of objects. All bearings and fine adjustment parts are thoroughly protected and dust-proof. Ample room is provided for free play of the fingers between the edge of the fine adjustment and the arm.

Catalog 7A on School Equipment sent postpaid on request.

The Superior Quality of Bausch and Lomb lenses, microscopes, field glasses, projection apparatus, engineering and other scientific instruments is the product of nearly Sixty Years' Experience.
